Annual Winter Review Issue 2026– Call for Proposals

Deadline for proposals: Extended to July 1st, 2025

Guest Editor: Gary Darmstadt, MD, MS

The Editors-in-Chief of Pediatric Research announce the topic of the 2026 Annual Review Issue, entitled "Planetary Health and Impact on Children".

Pediatric Research is preparing its Annual Winter Review Issue with the topic, "Planetary Health and Impact on Children". The past several decades has seen rapidly increasing concerns about the impact on children of tap water contaminants, landfills including diaper waste, environmental disasters such as the Cantara Loop Spill, smoke from wildfires, consequences of war, microplastics present in the food chain, endocrine disrupters, and the impact of global climate change on clean water resources, arable land, and changes in vector distribution. Many of science's new advanced tools are being brought to bear on issues of exposure, pharmacodynamics and outcomes, such as biomarkers, informatics, 'omics, advanced imaging, and AI/machine learning. This review issue will pull together recent information on all facets of planetary health and its impact on developing humans from bench to bedside and beyond!

This is an excellent opportunity for junior faculty to pair up with senior mentors to develop these reviews. Please note that standard publication page fees are waived for manuscripts included in the Annual Review Issue.

Letters of intent should include a proposed title and be sent to info@pedres.org by the deadline. Please include "ARI Winter Review 2026 Proposal" in the subject line.
